Energy
As energy demands continue to be a critical driver to the preservation and growth of our nation’s businesses and communities, we stand ready to apply decades of experience in surveying, environmental planning and permitting, engineering, and construction administration to support critical infrastructure needs.

Whether it’s completing surveys for transmission and distribution construction or water/wastewater conveyance projects, developing sophisticated 3-D site/civil design, visualization for substation/transformer or renewable energy sites, power plant decommissioning, or comprehensive water management planning, we understand our clients’ technical, economic, and safety concerns.
“Dewberry has done an outstanding job helping us get through the permitting and design phases of the project.”
